AN ORDINANCE

Regulating the inspection of steam boilers in and for the City of Philadelphia, Pa., and defining rules for rating the maximum pressure that shall be allowed to be carried on stationary steam boilers when they are made in whole or in part of wrought-iron sheets riveted together.

SECTION 1. The Select and Common Councils of the City of Philadelphia do ordain, That the Inspector of Steam-Engines and Boilers in and for the City of Philadelphia shall be governed by the following rules in estimating the maximum pressure at which stationary steam-boilers may be worked.

Rules for rating the maximum working pressure on cylindrical shells of stationary steam-boilers.

In estimating the strength of the longitudinal seams in the cylindrical shells of boilers he shall apply two formulæ.

Formula (A) (Pitch of rivets) — (Diameter of the holes punched to receive the rivets) ÷ (Pitch of rivets) = (Percentage of the strength of the sheet at the seam, as compared to the strength of the solid part of the same sheet).

Formula (B) . . . (Area of the hole filled by the rivet) × (Number of rows of rivets in the seam) ÷ (Pitch of rivets) × (Thickness of the sheet) = (Percentage of the strength of the rivets in the seam as compared to the strength of the solid part of the sheet.)

Take the lowest of the percentages as found by formulæ (A) and (B) and apply that percentage as the "value of the seam" in the following formula (C), which determines the strength of the longitudinal seams.

Formula (C) . . . (Thickness of the boiler-plate, expressed in parts of an inch) × (Value of the seam as obtained by formula A or B) × (Ultimate strength of the iron in the plates) ÷ (Internal radius of the boiler in inches) × (Factor of safety) = (Pressure per square inch at which the safety valve may be set).

Sec. 2. Ultimate Strength and Factor of Safety. When the wrought-iron plates used in the construction of the boiler have not been stamped by the maker of the iron, and are of wholly unknown quality as to tensile strength and ductility, the Inspector shall not assume the ultimate strength to be in in excess of forty thousand (40,000) pounds per square inch of section, and he shall use the value assumed with a factor of safety of five (5) in Formula (C), provided the workmanship on the boiler is satisfactory. When each plate used in the construction of the shell of the boiler shows legibly the stamp of the maker of the iron, such stamp setting forth the maker's name and the quality of the iron as to its tensile strength, the lowest of such marks not in excess of fifty thousand (50,000) pounds per square inch of section shall be assumed as the ultimate strength to be used with a factor of safety of five (5) in Formula (C). provided the workmanship on the boiler is satisfactory. If the marks or stamps on the plates do not give the tensile strength, but the quality is indicated by any well-known trade-mark, the Inspector may use the value in tensile strength that is ascribed to the brand by the maker of the iron plate, such value not in excess of fifty thousand (50,000) pounds per square inch of section to be assumed as the ultimate strength to be used with a factor of safety of five (5) in Formula (C), provided the workmanship on the boiler is satisfactory.

Whenever the maker or user of the boiler submits evidence to the Inspector that is satisfactory to him that the wrought-iron plates used in the construction of the boiler have been tested by parties provided with the machines for testing and appointed to test materials for boilers under the United States laws for the inspection of steamboats, or by other parties whose appliances for testing and whose reliability are satisfactory to the inspector, then the lowest value ascribed to the plates by the test shall be used in Formula (C) under the conditions hereinafter named, to wit: The certificate of the tests shall set forth the number of makers who have furnished the iron used in the construction of the boiler, and the tests shall be of sufficient number, not less than two from each make of iron, to determine the quality of the iron. The specimens for test must be planed true, not sheared, to width, and must show a ductility of not less than fifteen (15) per cent. when cut lengthwise of the plate measured over a length equal to twelve (12) thickness of the plate. If the Inspector is satisfied that the iron fulfills the requirements of the test he shall use the full lowest tensile strength as shown by the tests as the ultimate strength with a factor of safety of five (5) in Formula (C), provided the workmanship on the boiler is satisfactory. If the lowest test for ductility shows twenty (20) per cent. or over, and specimens cut lengthwise from the plates will bend cold one hundred and eighty (180) degrees over a diameter equal to two (2) thicknesses of the plate without sign of fracture, and when cut crosswise of the plate will bend cold to ninety (90) degrees over a diameter equal to five (5) thicknesses of the plate without sign of fracture, then the lowest tensile strength as shown by the tests shall be assumed as the ultimate strength, and be used with a factor of safety of four (4) in Formula (C), provided that the workmanship on the boiler is satisfactory.

Sec. 3. Boiler Flues and Furnaces of Cylindrical Form. Boiler flues and furnaces of cylindrical form submitted to external pressure, tending to cause the cylinder to collapse when formed of wrought-iron plates united by rivets, and all of the seams made with lap-joints, shall be rated by the following rule: Fifty thousand (50,000) × two (2) thicknesses of the plate . . . = Safe load.

Twenty (20) × diameter of the flue.

N. B.—This rule is based on the assumption that the circumferential seams act as braces, and reduce the unsupported length of the flue or furnace to the length of the sections joined by the circumferential seams.

Sec. 4. Stay-bolts and Stays. The area of stay-bolts and stays submitted to strain shall be measured at their least section, and one-fifth of the breaking strength of the iron shall be assumed as the safe working load if the ductility test of the iron does not exceed fifteen (15) per cent., but may be taken at one-fourth when the ductility test shows twenty (20) per cent. or over. The allowable strain on stay-bolts or stays of unknown quality of iron shall never be considered higher than seven thousand five hundred (7,500) pounds per square inch of section measured at the point of least section.

Sec. 5. Boiler heads. If the radius of the curvature of the convex head of the boiler be equal to the diameter of the shell of the boiler to which it is attached, then the metal in the head sheet must be of the same thickness as the plates used in the shell or cylindrical part, and no bracing is necessary. All flat heads must be stayed up to the value of the shell when not held by wellsecured flues or tubes. Domes and manholes in the shell of the boiler must be made as strong as the other parts of the boiler by any of the well known methods to the satisfaction of the Inspector.

Sec. 6. Hydrostatic Test. All new stationary steam boilers erected, or to be erected, where they come under the provisions of the Act must be inspected either at the shop where made or at the place of erection, and shall be submitted to a hydrostatic test of one-third greater than the boiler is rated to carry, preferably before the walls are built about them, in order that all parts may be readily seen by the Inspector. After any extensive repairs have been made in a boiler the hydrostatic test shall be applied, but at the annual inspection of boilers in use the hydrostatic test shall only be applied when the Inspector deems such test necessary, and it is not essential that it shall be applied at the time of the internal examination.

N. B. It is desirable that the hydrostatic test be applied in all cases when practicable at as high a temperature as the personal safety of the Inspector will warrant.

Sec. 7. Specifications of the Boiler. In the case of all boilers submitted for inspection for the first time, the Inspector shall be furnished by the maker or user thereof with a specication containing a statement of the quality and thickness of the iron used in the boiler, designating its strength by trademark or from actual test, as the case may be, the pressure per square inch the boiler is designed to carry, the size and the distance apart of the holes punched to receive the rivets, the size of the rivets used, the size and the quality of the iron used in bracing of the boiler, to enable the Inspector to rate the boiler by the rules already laid down. All stationary steam boilers hereafter erected in the City shall have in a conspicuous place thereon the maker's name and the date of the erection for use.

Sec. 8. Relating to Boilers in Use Prior to the Passage of this Ordinance. All boilers in use and which come under the provisions of the ordinance governing boiler inspection, and which have already been inspected and rated in accordance with the rules heretofore used by the Inspector, may be continued at the same rating subject to a decrease of pressure due to wear and deterioration whenever the Inspector deems such decrease necessary. If, however, the user of any stationary steam boiler desires a revised rating he can demand an inspection, provided he submits a specification and complies with all the requirements needed in the first inspection of a new boiler, but in such case the hydrostatic test may be applied without removing the walls.

Sec. 9. Duty of the Inspectors. It shall be the duty of the Inspector to keep a record of all the boilers inspected by him, detailing the kind of boiler, date when made, by whom made, dimensions of boiler and flues and thickness of iron, particulars of the riveting as regards the diameter of the rivets and the holes punched to receive the rivets, the spacing of rivets, the calculations made by him in accordance with the rules given, the hydrostatic test applied, and such remarks as will indicate his judgment in passing upon the boiler, date of inspection and the pressure allowed; also, such other particulars as the Inspector may deem necessary.

Sec. 10. Attachments. Each boiler shall have upon it three gauge-cocks and one glass water-gauge, or in place of the gauge-cocks a second glass water-gauge. Each should have an independent connection with the boiler itself. If one connecting pipe is used for both apparatus it must be at least nine (9) square inches area. Gauge-cocks, when used, must be so placed that the middle gauge must be at least four (4) inches above the top of the flues, tubes or crown of the firebox. The lowest point of vision of the water in glass gauge must be above the top of flues, tubes or crown of the firebox.

Sec. 11. Opening in Boiler to facilitate Inspection. All boilers shall be provided with man or hand-holes through which an inspection of the interior of the boiler can be made.

SEC. 12. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.
